Koninklijke Tichelaar Makkum calling the creative professionals

Over the last ten years Koninklijke Tichelaar Makkum has built up an outstanding reputation in the field of contemporary architecture. The renewed interest in ceramic building products shown by architects and designers, owing to their durable qualities, has meant a major increase in assignments at home and abroad. The company has, for instance, developed and produced special effect glazes and façade elements in cooperation with architects and the development of colours for glazes has really taken off. Ceramic processes and operations that had almost vanished from the ceramic industry have been rediscovered and the factory is increasingly being used for research into and the production of applications for various materials.

These developments require changes in the company. We have always taken great pleasure in showing and selling our superb ceramic collection and other inspiring contemporary design and traditional craft products to our extensive clientele at the shop in Makkum.

We also want to meet the wishes of architects and designers and have therefore decided to reorganize the shop.

From 1st January 2012 we shall be making part of the showroom available for presentations and other activities in cooperation with architects, designers and other clients on weekdays. From that date the shop will only be open on Saturdays or by arrangement. The ceramic collection will of course remain available from our webshop as always.

In addition to this we are working on a new website oriented towards both the creative professional and those interested in our ceramic collection. In this way we hope to keep you informed of our services and products, and new developments in the company, as well and as effectively as possible. We expect the new website to be up and running in June 2012.
